HELLO

Every project is a world to build.

I’m a graphic designer who builds visual worlds: a cybersecurity campaign that makes staying safe online feel urgent, sci-fi posters for films I love, book covers and an image journal. Bold type, one loud red, and a clear story in every piece.

CyberShield Campaign

Brief

CYBERSHIELD aims to educate and protect young adults online, by providing young adults with essential digital skills, to raise awareness about cyber threats. Our primary focus is teenagers and young adults (17-24), this group often spend most of their time online, and are uncultured on the risks of cyber attacks. This makes them vulnerable to attacks and we want to prevent this by putting all our effort to educating them about this topic.

Deliverables

- Website wireframe
- Style guide
- Logo
- Poster
- Instagram posts
- Campaign and poster mockups
- Campaign website

PROCESS

Approach

As project lead I took the campaign from a wireframe of the website and a style guide to the logo, then the posters and mockups. The logo began as pencil sketches of shields, circuit lines and brains, refined into a circuit-board shield with a CS chip at its center.

PROJECT 02 · MAIN

Sci-fi Movie Posters

A series of three movie posters for Ridley Scott sci-fi films: Blade Runner (1982), The Martian (2015) and Alien (1979).

Sci-fi Movie Posters

Brief

All three posters share one visual system: a black background, a red/salmon halftone portrait at the top, a red line-art scene at the bottom, a thin white frame and white geometric sans-serif titles. Blade Runner and The Martian came first; Alien completes the set of three.

Approach

I started by finding high-quality images, then used Photoshop to remove backgrounds, blend the images together and add effects. Finally I used Illustrator for the vector elements, such as the border and the text.

Inspiration is the spark that nudges us to create, to dream, to grow.

JOVIALITY

Joviality is the laughter we share, a lightness in the air that makes everything feel easier.

Emotion

PEACE

Peace is the calm feeling that keeps us steady even when life gets busy. It means letting go of worries and focusing on the present. When we feel peaceful, we are strong enough to handle challenges, and that calm spreads to make our world a kinder, more relaxed place.

UNDERSTANDING

Understanding is the act of listening deeply and trying to see the world from another's perspective.
